Synopsis

â œYouâ ™re the best fake boyfriend I ever had.â •â œLove existsâ | in books, at least.â •Thereâ ™s no way bookstore owner Jeremy Bennett is going to his ten-year class reunion after accidentally drunk-posting on the reunionâ ™s Facebook page and making himself sound a) much more interesting than he actually is, by b) claiming to do the kind of things he actually only reads about, and c) worse, also claiming to have a super hot boyfriend, when in reality, d) his dating history is more like the bastard love child of a trainwreck and a what-not-to-do reality show.â œlâ ™m no good at romance.â •When one of Nick Robertsâ ™ personal training clients mistakes him for the boyfriend of a new gym member, Nick decides to play along on a whim. After all, he canâ ™t let the guy die from embarrassment, and besides, even though Nick isnâ ™t gay, he has a feeling that the story behind the mistaken identity might prove to be the most fun heâ ™s had since moving to Tulsa.â œl went from faking it to feeling it. Donâ ™t tell me this isnâ ™t real.â •Falling for your fake boyfriend is a guaranteed dating fail. Unless the stars alignâ |Falling is a steamy, standalone gay romance novel with a HEA and no cliffhangers. Book EVER! Sierra knocked this one out of the -- er --mud? Pun intended. When I read my first Sierra Riley book, I knew she was on to something. The little subtle display of innocence that caught you off guard until the raunchiness slapped you in the face. I absolutely LOVED this book. I was so riveted, I locked the kids out until I completed it.In his heart of hearts, Jeremy just wanted to be special to someone. Jeremy fell fast and he fell hard. No wonder he had so many exes! But on the bright side, Jeremy was a doll. He was that character that had you mentally rolling your eyes with his long-windedness of thoughts. Jeremy wanted to be love because a) he deserved it after all the frogs he'd gone through, b) just to make it out alive c) unscathed, d) willing to go back into the shark infested waters, e) until the perfect man came along. What Jeremy did not expect when he drunk Face Book message was to have the perfect man land in his path and spoil him for all other. And honestly, if he were into guys, he'd probably go for someone like Jeremy. Nick was a trainer, who had made the move to be closer to his daughter. Though he had a disability that had hindered him throughout his life, he was determined to be the best father ever. Finding himself the fake boyfriend of the yummy Jeremy threw him off guard. Even having a gay best friend could not prepare Nick for all that was Jeremy and the more time they spent together, the more time he wanted. He was THE ONE. There is no stopping the heart when it is invested.
