In a nutshell: our mind and emotions influence our health. He stops there. Research presented here is exemplified by a report on page 188 of a clinical psychologist who spent three years visiting complementary cancer centers all over the world. Therapies ranged from diet and macrobiotics, special herbs, and cancer-fighting mental imagery. His report? 10% of patients experienced no discernible improvement, 40% confessed to some temporary benefit to the quality of their lives, 40% reported felt slightly more long-lasting benefit for a period of weeks, months or even years in which they lived disease-free, 10% had a partial or complete remission of cancer.
